The first thing I'd change is the architecture, not the names.

Right now you're organizing the business around what you do. Clients buy outcomes, not disciplines.

Looking at everything we've worked on over the past few weeks, I see four businesses emerging.

1. Strategy & Advisory
2. Technology
3. Growth
4. Education (which may come later)

That creates a much clearer story.

Parent Company

Since this entity is mainly for legal, contracts, invoicing and ownership, it shouldn't sound like a flashy agency.

Some options:

Best fit

- Cliqworx Holdings (future-proof)
- Cliqworx Group
- Cliqworx Ventures (if you'll launch products)
- Cliqworx Capital (if investing later)
- Cliqworx Collective (modern)

- CWX Holdings (corporate)

I'd probably register

Cliqworx Holdings (Pty) Ltd

Everything invoices through here.

Brand Architecture

1. Cliqworx Advisory

(Currently Strategy)

I would avoid "Strategy" because it sounds vague.

Advisory immediately signals senior expertise.

Services

- Digital Transformation
- Product Management
- Product Strategy
- Customer Experience
- Innovation Consulting
- AI Adoption Strategy
- Digital Roadmaps
- Business Process Optimisation
- Technology Advisory

Industry focus

Rather than serving everyone...

Position around

Helping financial institutions, insurers, education providers and service businesses design better digital products and customer experiences.

That fits your experience perfectly.

Zimbabwe Offering

Instead of saying

We sell Digify

You become

Zimbabwe's Consumer Education and Digital Learning Partner.

Services

- Financial Education Platforms
- Consumer Education
- Compliance Training
- Employee Learning
- Customer Onboarding
- Digital Literacy
- ESG Education
- Insurance Education
- Investment Education

The software is simply one solution you implement.

2. Cliqworx Labs

This one is already good.

Labs implies builders.

Position

Websites engineered to generate leads.

Not

We build websites.

Services

Launch

Starter

One-page website

R500 once-off

Growth

5 pages

SEO

CRO

Hosting support

R5,000/month

Scale

6-10 pages

SEO

CRO

Maintenance

Analytics

Monthly optimisation

R10,000/month

I actually wouldn't offer maintenance separately.

Sell

Website-as-a-Service.

That creates recurring revenue.

3. Cliqworx Growth

I like this more than Digital.

Digital sounds like 2016.

Growth sounds measurable.

Services

- Google Ads
- Meta Ads
- LinkedIn Ads
- Lead Generation
- Landing Pages
- Conversion Optimisation
- Marketing Automation
- Analytics

Packages

Launch

R5,000/month

Growth

R10,000/month

Scale

R15,000/month

Enterprise

R25,000+/month

Ad spend excluded.

Future

Eventually

Cliqworx Learning

or

Cliqworx Academy

where you own digital education products instead of consulting.

Not now.

Maybe 2028.

I actually think you're missing one company

Looking at your background.

Your biggest advantage isn't websites.

It isn't ads.

It isn't consulting.

It's that you're a Product Manager.

Very few agencies have that capability.

You should sell that.

For example

Fractional Product Management

You become the outsourced Head of Product for SMEs.

Services

- Product Strategy
- Product Discovery
- MVP Planning
- Roadmaps
- User Research
- Agile Delivery
- Product Analytics

Monthly retainers

R20k-R80k.

There are very few competitors in South Africa doing this well.

How I'd Position the Entire Group

Cliqworx Holdings builds, grows and transforms digital businesses across Africa.

Through three specialist companies:

Cliqworx Advisory

Digital transformation, product strategy, customer experience and innovation consulting.

Cliqworx Labs

High-performance websites, SEO, CRO and Website-as-a-Service for growing businesses.

Cliqworx Growth

Performance marketing, lead generation and marketing automation that drives measurable revenue.

One thing I would change completely

I wouldn't market these as three separate businesses initially.

You're still building market presence.

Running three brands means:

- three websites
- three LinkedIn pages
- three SEO strategies
- three marketing budgets
- three sets of case studies
- three sales funnels

That's a lot of overhead.

Instead, I'd build one master brand with three practice areas:

- Cliqworx Advisory
- Cliqworx Labs
- Cliqworx Growth

One website.

One LinkedIn company page.

One CRM.

One proposal template.

One sales pipeline.

Then, once revenue is consistently above a level where separate brands add value (for example, R300k to R500k in monthly recurring revenue), you can spin each practice into its own distinct brand if there's a strategic reason to do so.

Given your ambitions, your existing experience at Ogilvy, your product management background, and your focus on the Zimbabwe financial education opportunity, this approach gives you a cleaner market position, lower operating complexity, and a stronger platform to expand into Zimbabwe in 2027 and additional African markets thereafter.

so the website name is Cliqworx.com

Yes, and that actually strengthens the case for keeping everything under one brand.

If you own Cliqworx.com, I would make that the only public-facing brand for the next few years.

Recommended Structure

Cliqworx Holdings (Pty) Ltd (legal entity, not marketed)

Cliqworx (public brand and website: Cliqworx.com)

Within the website, create three practice areas rather than three separate companies.

Advisory

Helping organisations transform, innovate and build better digital products.

Services:

- Product Management

- Customer Experience (CX)

Your Zimbabwe Opportunity

I wouldn't make this a separate company.

I'd create an industry solution under Advisory.

For example:

Financial Education & Consumer Engagement

Then position it like this:

We help banks, insurers, pension funds, investment firms and regulators educate, onboard and engage consumers through digital learning platforms.

This lets you sell:

- Digify
- Consumer education
- Compliance education
- Financial literacy
- Employee learning
- Digital literacy
- Product onboarding

without locking yourself into a single software platform.

Navigation

I'd keep the navigation simple:

- Home
- Services
 - Advisory
 - Labs
 - Growth
- Industries
- Case Studies
- Insights
- About

- Contact

Notice there are no separate brands. To a client, it feels like one integrated consultancy with specialist capabilities.

Positioning

Your positioning should not be "we build websites" or "we run ads."

It should be:

Cliqworx helps ambitious organisations transform, build and grow digital businesses.

Everything fits under that promise.

- Advisory tells clients what to build.
- Labs builds it.
- Growth helps it scale.

That's a much stronger story than three independent agencies because clients can start with one service and naturally expand into the others.

One addition I'd make

Based on your experience, I'd introduce a fourth capability as a service line rather than a separate business:

Product Studio

This is where your background becomes a differentiator. Services could include:

- Fractional Product Management
- Product Discovery
- MVP Definition
- Roadmapping
- Agile Delivery
- Product Analytics

Very few digital agencies can credibly offer senior product management. It positions Cliqworx above a typical web or marketing agency and aligns well with your experience leading digital products and transformation initiatives.
